Dear Doctor Berry:

I am a little tardy in answering your letter of January 3. My trips away from my desk are quite solid this year and correspondence is pretty hard to take care of.

I would like to comment on your advice to involve the people of any area that we might take under consideration for planning for needed health services. I agree with you that the physicians and the people themselves must be involved in any plans. It is indeed disparaging to provide something, however good, without consulting the individuals involved. Everywhere I go I point this out, for I believe that the government approach is often to ignore these individuals.

I hope our colleagues in the medical profession will respond, for I believe that their unqualified participation in program that may have failed in the past will make all the difference in the world.

With best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Charles L. Hudson
