Dear Mrs. Williamson:

You really have no idea what a genuine pleasure it was to see you and your husband, Walter, recently, when Wayman was nice enough to bring me by. Neither of you have changed very much through the years. Of course, I knew you better, Bernice, and you are just as charming as you were when you taught in the same school that I attended as a youngster, a few moons ago. I was glad to be brought up to date on all of the things you have done, during the years that I have been out of touch. With me, old friends never die. So you see, I could have been around until now, reminiscing and visiting in the old home town. I have just seen the note of the passing of Attorney R. G. L. Paige. He probably was across the street in the hospital when I was there, although probably in coma.

If you can locate an intact copy of Hiram Simmons' book of Anthems, I will send you $10.00 to use in any way that you may have to, by way of encouragement of the possessor to part with the old relic. Please let me know if you have any luck.

If I did not mention it before, please say hello to Ruth, for me, and also, to your husband, who was so "unlaxed" and at home in his own domicile, thanks to a good wife. Please give us a ring if you should chance to come to Chicago. My wife and I certainly be glad to see you. Now, until our paths cross again, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Leonidas H. Berry, M. D.
