Friends of the National Library of Medicine (FNL M) is a coalition of individuals, medical associations and societies, hospitals, health science libraries, corporations, and foundations dedicated to increasing public visibility for, appreciation of, and engagement with the National Library of Medicine (NLM). FNL M, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization, supports NLM's many programs in research, education, and public service.

Our mission:

To promote and enhance the mission of the National Library of Medicine, the FNL M convenes and celebrates thought leadership in data science, informatics and health care communications to:

- advance trusted resources for data-driven research and health information
- promote meaningful engagement across health communities and biomedical communications enterprises
- build the workforce of tomorrow

Our work:

- Accelerates discovery
- Advances health in the United States and globally
- Empowers individuals with trusted health information

Our Programs:

- Annual Awards Dinner: The FNLM Awards Dinner is held each Fall to recognize medical scientists, health sciences librarians, experts in nursing informatics and public figures who are demonstrated leaders in increasing awareness and support of important health issues. Due to COVID-19, the date for the Awards Dinner has been changed to February 9, 2021.
- FNLM Conferences: FNLM and NLM have been hosting state-of-the-science conferences for many years, usually held on the NIH campus in Bethesda, Maryland. These events feature presentations by experts in the field and provide cross-cutting perspectives from the research community, government, industry, and health centers. A series of virtual workshops are being offered this Fall.
- Minority Student Outreach Program: FNLM provides cooperative support and programming for the Mentoring in Medicine program. Mentoring in Medicine's mission is to diversify the healthcare workforce by mentoring and exposing underrepresented students to health careers. The program prepares high school students to become competitive applicants to and graduates from health professional schools. The program provides several hundred minority students with access to healthcare professionals, participation in medical seminars and field trips to medical facilities.
- Publishers Forum: FNLM convenes a group of biomedical publisher representatives, representatives from organizations that use a variety of publishing models including open access, from profit and non-profit, international, regional and U.S. based communities, and a representative from the health sciences library community. This group comes together with NLM staff on a periodic basis to discuss issues and concerns of common interest to help the participants work together as effectively as possible to bring quality health and scientific information to scientists, researchers, clinicians, and others.
